

Looking for Lockerbie

By Lawrence Mason Jr.

Syracuse Univ Pr (Sd). Hardcover. Book Condition: New. Hardcover. 240 pages. Dimensions: 12.4in. x 8.3in. x 1.0in. For most people, the words Lockerbie, Scotland evoke one image: the iconic photograph of a battered nose cone of the Pam Am Flight 103 jumbo jet surrounded by bodies, investigators, and debris on a lonely hillside. For the members of the Syracuse University community, that photography also represents the loss of 35 students, who were returning home from a semester spent studying abroad. Those students became part of the 270 lives lost in the Pan Am 103 Air Disaster on December 21, 1988, a tragedy that remained the deadliest terror attack on U. S. citizens until 911. Two Syracuse University professors and a group of student writers and photographers set out to expand the world's understanding of that town. Lockerbie and its residents charmed them with their generosity, their history, and their lives. So much so, they wanted to tell the world about this place and redefine it beyond the events of one fateful day. Over the course of 12 years and multiple trips, photography professor Larry Mason Jr. and magazine professor Melissa Chessher brought more than 50 students to capture this town in images...
