Elk Calf, the Little Blackfoot FOREWORD LONG, long time ago, say the Blackfeet Indians, we had our home in another part of the country, but the Chippewas drove us away. This was long before the coming of the white people, who found them wandering over the plains near the Rocky Mountains in what is now Montana. We are Sik-si-kau, these Indians would tell us. How, then, did the white men come to call them Blackfeet? Perhaps it was because they wore darkcolored moccasins, but we do not know. They were once very powerful. Only fifty years ago it was said they had ten thousand warriors. But to-day only a few of the Blackfeet are left. They are crowded together in a small corner of the country which they are never sure of holding. They cannot be happy when they think of the changes...
